Why does the difference in religion matter so much, to the extent that entire populations are wiped out over it? Why is one religion such as Christianity or one religious scripture such as Bagavad Gita given superiority over others? Where individuals, each holding their beliefs as true, would fight it out and where the more authoritative among them wins the argument irrespective of their incapability to provide solid evidence, The Sun God explores and facilitates us to see them in a new light.

The author traces the ‘modern’ religions back to their pagan roots – to the Sun God, Horus – and how each religion has more in common than their followers realize. To note a few prominent characteristics that men, women of all race and nationality ought to be aware of:

Virgin birth and the birth day

Miracles

Epithets

Resistance and subsequent triumph

As you read the book, you will note how the ancient gods and goddesses shared these attributes and how exactly one religion after another has been exploiting or building upon the myths of others. For example, the sun has long been worshipped since the beginning of the world as the “light of the world” and the “savior” for all; the same as followers of Mithras, Dionysus, and Zoroaster claim.

This book (re)introduces the fundamental elements of the predominant faiths and native traditions practiced in world today. In drawing parallels based on ideas presented by Zeitgeist: The Movie – Part 1, however, the author gives special attention to the Egyptian Sun God, Horus, and the Christian figure, Jesus Christ, which have been warped for political reasons.

Given that we are living in an age in which people are disillusioned with religions, The Sun God provides guidance in a blunt and easy to read format. Read objectively and without prejudice, the multiple accounts along with significant paintings, carvings and other physical proofs are going to ring true for a lot of people, skeptics and believers alike.
