~EXCERPT~

Spinning around, Penelope found herself nose to nose with Prince Andrew, former scoundrel, puller of pigtailed, and the subject of entirely too many conversations that day. And to her dismay, he had not grown stodgy over the last few years, either. Quite the contrary.

In fact, he had grown shockingly handsome.

The prince's face broke into a sly smile. "I knew it was you," he said, leaning one elbow against the railing. "I recognized you the moment I saw the mud on that hem."

Indignant words filled Penelope's mouth, but when she glanced at her skirt she saw that it was indeed spotted with mud, probably from her trek through the stables. This was exactly why she hated skirts. They were always getting dirty, and climbing trees in them was a nightmare. She much preferred trousers.

She realized she'd just spoken the thought out loud when Andrew's smile widened. "If there was any doubt in my mind that it's you behind that pretty face," he said, "It's gone now. You're still climbing trees, eh? You haven't changed as much as I thought."

"Pretty face?" She replied, planting both hands on her hips. "Spare me whatever joke you're making at my expense."

"...And apparently you still can't take a compliment. You really haven't changed a bit, have you?" Despite the dismayed shake of his head, the prince looked pleased about it, too.

She scowled. "What do you want, Andrew?"
